whom it may concern,

I am writing to strongly recommend Soohum Kaushik, who interned with us at AppRabbit and quickly proved himself to be a highly capable and dependable backend developer. Throughout his time here, Soohum demonstrated impressive technical depth, strong debugging instincts, and a proactive attitude that made a real impact on our engineering team.

Soohum played a key role in strengthening our backend systems — fixing complex bugs, optimizing data handling, and ensuring that our APIs performed reliably under load. He was quick to understand our codebase and architecture, and even quicker to identify edge cases or logic flaws that others missed. His attention to detail and tenacity in resolving persistent bugs saved us valuable development time and improved overall product stability.

In addition to backend development, Soohum took initiative in writing clean, maintainable code and contributing to our internal tooling. He often jumped into tricky legacy issues, offering insightful debugging strategies and fixes that made long-standing problems disappear. His communication was clear, his updates were consistent, and he was always eager to learn from code reviews and team discussions.

I have no doubt that Soohum will continue to grow into a strong software engineer wherever he goes. His combination of backend proficiency, sharp problem-solving ability, and calm persistence under pressure make him a tremendous asset to any technical team.

Sincerly,

Cory Swainston
